Very Practical and insightful!!

By Arthur Sauer

Doc Reid and his son Josh have compiled practical advice from their years of experience and the experience of many others. This is an invaluable resource of ideas and suggestions to help break the cycle of industrial youth ministry in the local church. This book is a call to go out and do ministry rather than administrative ministry. It's a great read with sound advice and Biblical foundation. Definitely a recommended book for all student ministers.

Student Ministers, READ GET OUT!

By Aaron Dougherty

The Reid's team up to communicate a timely message to student ministers today that desperately needs to be heard: GET OUT! A student minister has to learn how to balance church and community as well as time spent in and out of the office. With the combination of Dr. Reid's academic excellence and Josh's practical experience, the best of both worlds collide to demonstrate the need of the hour in student (not youth...read the book) ministry. Having served in the trenches of student ministry at various churches, I am proud to endorse a book that spells out multiple ways of moving a ministry that is focused on what takes place in the four walls of a church to that which takes place outside those same walls! Some of the points of application are repetitive (such as feeding football teams and working with FCA) but perhaps that is the point. Maybe student ministers need to hear and READ these words over and over: GET OUT!

Get It!

By kris kuriger

This book is a needed read on the present and future of youth ministry. Its time that people begin to see students as members of the body of Christ who are called just the same to "be" the church and be equipped as young people to make sacrificial decisions that glorify God. This book provides ample biblical and practical scenarios to help every youth minister begin to find little ways to turn event driven youth groups into missional centers of student discipleship. Excited for this book to push the next generation of youth ministers to a better and higher calling!
